East India Company s Engineers It is due to the Subscribers to this Volume to state that, although it contains only five papers relative to the operations of the war lately terminated, every effort has been made to obtain Notes on this subject, the interest in which is so much increased by reflecting upon the large number of our brother officers (viz., fourteen), who have fallen during its continuance, of whose gallantry and science such records form lasting memorials, whilst they also afford glorious examples to those who remain, as well as most valuable guidance to enable us to profit by the experience gained in actual warfare with the arms and missiles employed at the present time. The Official Journals of the Operations in the Crimea are not yet ready for publication, and the almost unprecedented and harassing amount of duty in the trenches, consequent upon the smallness of the number of our brother officers present, has probably prevented their writing any Papers on the subject for this Volume.
