Not illustrated. 1859 Excerpt: .the scenes of past times and the habits of the famous ones of the earth: -- The empress sat singly at the upper end of a long table, at which about twelve of the nobility were guests. The entertainment consisted of a variety of exafter the French fashion; and was concluded by a dessert of the finest fruits and sweetmeats, such as I little expected to find in that northern climate. Most of these luxuries were, however, the produce of the empress s own do. minions. Pine-apples, indeed, are chieflyim ported from England; though those of the growth of Russia, of which we had one that day, are of good flavour, but generally small. Water-melons and grapes are brought from Astracan; great plenty of melons from Moscow, and apples and pears from the Ukraine. But what most enlivened the whole entertainment was the unaffected ease and...
