Edges farthest from SV (as determined from the top and the front views), usually will be invisible in the side view. All edges connecting visible and invisible points or two invisible points, are invisible. All projection lines should be made light, dashed, and in black, and drawn only where a new method or principle is shown. All construction lines and planes should be made dot-and-dash lines in black. All axes of projection, when shown, should be made solid, in black. All axes of form, center lines, and all dimension lines should be made dot-and-dash, in red. All extension lines should be drawn dotted, in red. derstanding of their form. It is the most expeditious and least trying on the eyes of all methods. The light is usually assumed as coming from above, behind, and from the left of the draftsman, the projections of all rays forming angles of 45 degrees (opening to the right) with the axes of projection in all planes. Then, the surfaces will be light or dark in proportion to the directness or indirectness of the light upon them, Fig. 2. All plane surfaces, as those of prisms, pyramids, bases of cylinders, etc., are tinted flatly--i. e., uniform in tone throughout. Developments should be tinted flatly and of the same tone as the lightest surface of the original object. All curved surfaces, as...
